Supporters, cops flock to site of original N.Y. protest

CNN

New York Police encircled Lower Manhattan's Zuccotti Park on Sunday as protesters geared up to observe the one-year anniversary of Occupy Wall Street.

A loosely organized group of demonstrators first gathered in New York one year ago Monday as part of a movement that thrust "the 99 percent" into the political lexicon. The protests spread to dozens of cities across the U.S.

On Saturday, police said, they made "multiple arrests," charging protesters on various counts including disorderly conduct, resisting arrests and felony assault.

Video of the scene showed people near the park being detained, while others banged on drums and shouted. Zuccotti Park is located in the city's financial district.

The group's messages have ranged from protecting the environment to protests over education costs. There's been an overriding theme of condemning income inequality and social injustice.

Occupy put out a statement saying "the day's events are about flexing people power in the streets and utilizing public spaces."

"The Occupy movement continues to utilize culturally creative tactics to build the movement for social and economic justice," the group said.

The movement also has been criticized for its lack of focus and over reliance on a physical space.

"The camp is one of the central points for the first couple of months and that's just not a sustainable form of protest," said Fordham University professor Heather Gautney, referring to Zuccotti Park.

"So I think there was a transition into more localized acts of protest but they never really had the momentum that the camps had."

Occupy had "a problem of transitioning into a new strategy," she said.

The group's mantra has traditionally been directed against the so-called privileged 1 percent of society—such as banks, the mortgage industry, insurance providers and others.

The 99 percent is a reference to the broader public, which the group said had been undermined by those institutions.

What a waste of plastic surgery

Stephen Markley

» @stephenmarkley

We need some levity this Monday.

I've been saving this column for a long, long time. It's my "break the glass in case of emergency" column. It's my "crossing the streams of the proton packs" column.

With the tragic Benghazi incident abroad and the divisive, emotional standoff between teachers and the city here in Chicago, we need to be reminded of the wonderful, unflinching absurdity of the human condition, which, I would argue, is defined by Steve Markley, 28-year-old genital enthusiast, pontificating on the plastic surgery operation known as "the Barbie."

The Barbie is thus named because the intent of the surgery is to make a woman's nether regions resemble that of the famous doll. Or in the terrifying, giggling-fit-inducing words of The Atlantic, it's a "procedure in which the labia minora are completely amputated to create a 'smooth' genital look."

Strike or no strike, aren't you glad you live in Chicago instead of that horror house of Southern California where a bunch of freak show doctors pioneered this lunacy?

There's a lot to unpack here—so much that I fear one column will not do it justice, and I'll have to start a separate RedEye blog devoted entirely to discussing the Barbie.

However, first and foremost, I'm confused as to why women think their private parts need beautification when clearly the thing to aesthetically work on is the male organ. There is no such thing as a good-looking penis. They are either a 1 out of 10 or a 32 out of 10. Every male member bears a striking resemblance to the latter-day melting-wax-statue version of Sylvester Stallone we see in films such as "The Expendables 2": weirdly contorted, inexplicably veiny and oddly tanned.

Unfortunately, the plastic surgery industry would have little to work with. Sure, there is such a thing as surgery that can make it longer (ladies, the guy reading over your shoulder on the train just rushed to Google on his smartphone), but no surgeon has yet tackled the daunting aesthetic challenges posed by what 49 percent of the population has between his legs.

And yes, in order to research this column, I, as a highly professional journalist, now have "plastic surgery for penis" in my search history (well, bookmarked—whatever, don't worry about it).

Despite a stern warning against cosmetic vaginal surgery by the American Congress of Obstetricians and Gynecologists, women continue to ask for the Barbie in record numbers. And there is something reassuring about this, that when the aliens find the ruins of our civilization, they'll see that there was a concrete strata of this fallen world that wielded its economic power to make its genitals look prettier.

Then they'll turn to each other, their long, strange alien faces contorted in befuddlement, clutching scraps of newspaper describing an overheating climate, dwindling resources, religious confrontation and raging debates over how to educate the populace, and say: "Wait, their scientists grew a self-aware, fully cognizant, human-sized male sex organ just so it could appear in an action film that grossed less than $30 million for the opening weekend box office? I get the Barbie, but what sense does that make?"

Reducing, reusing and recycling ... Chicago-style

By Mick Swasko

REDEYE

Want to shed the green guilt? In the dark about how to go a little easier on Mother Nature in Chicago? Here's a quick guide to some city services and programs you might not know about.

Multi-Unit Recycling:

In Chicago, buildings with five or more separate units are considered "multi-unit" structures, and they have their own rules for recycling. If you live in a larger building or high-rise, you still should be able to recycle. City code requires building owners or condo associations to provide a written recycling plan to all residents and annually update them about how to participate in the plan. New residents also must be informed of the plan upon moving in, and all tenants must be informed of any changes 10 days before they happen.

Blue Bin Blues:

Residents who are not currently a part of the blue cart recycling program have options. The city has 37 drop-off points for recyclable materials. They are open seven days a week during daylight hours and accept the same materials that can be discarded in blue carts. Important note: Any plastic bags used to haul the recyclables to the site aren't accepted in the bins.

Waste not: Wasted food is one of the biggest sources of "green guilt." Since 2007, the city has allowed residents to maintain small-scale compost operations in their backyards without a permit. Leftover food and other organic waste can be responsibly disposed of this way, as opposed to tossing it in the dumpster.

SOME CHICAGOANS FIND LIVING THE GREEN LIFE IS MORE TROUBLE THAN IT'S WORTH

By Mick Swasko

REDEYE

Turn off that light; it's wasting energy.

Do you really have to drive?

You remembered to separate the organics for the compost bin, didn't you?

Even with an ever-growing chorus of tipsters giving such advice in everyday life and pop culture, it's not easy being green.

Max Boeh of Lakeview says he has trouble keeping up. The 23-year-old does his best to live green, but sometimes he falls short—particularly when it comes to recycling. He has been known to toss plastics and other reusable items out with the rest of the garbage. And he's not 100 percent sure the bin his landlord designated for recycling is even being used for that purpose. He doesn't have a blue recycling cart from the city.

"I feel kind of bad about it, I just don't have easy access to [recycling]," he said.

Boeh is just one of many Americans who will admit to green guilt. While his thing is recycling, there are a host of eco-friendly activities Americans feel ashamed about neglecting, according to a recent survey by the Shelton Group, a marketing firm that focuses on sustainability and energy efficiency issues. Thirty-nine percent of those polled said they feel guilty about wasting food, with other issues such as leaving the lights on, wasting water and not recycling ranking in the Top 5 on a list of the country's eco-regrets.

Jessica Villalobos, 29, of Edison Park, has

“I'd like to say I'd consider myself environmentally conscious, if not always in practice, definitely in awareness. At the same time I'm kind of lazy. It's kind of hard to always take my beliefs and put them into practice.”

—Toby Greenwalt, 32, of Portage Park

two children and finds herself without the time to separate her recyclables from the trash. On top of that, her neighborhood isn't part of the city's blue cart program, which means her recyclables aren't picked up picked up by city workers or private contractors. Instead, she has to take them to one of 37 collection sites throughout the city, something she said is low on her priority list.

"If we had the blue bins here I am 100 percent sure we would be [recycling]," she said.

The blue cart program, which began testing in 2005, is expected to reach all neighborhoods in the city by the end of 2013, according to Chris Sauve, program director for recycling in the Department of Streets and Sanitation. Currently, about 260,000 households have the blue carts, of about 600,000 households total. In 2011, 54,554 tons of recycling was collected, or about 13.5 percent of all trash collected in the city. In 2010, 13.4 percent of all trash was recyclables.

"We've seen a pretty good reaction actually," Sauve said of expansions that happened earlier this year, one of which was on the West Side. "Folks were very happy that the program was rolling out to their neighborhood."

Still, some say they are in the dark about their options for recycling.

"I think it's ... a matter of making [information] easily accessible to people," Boeh said. When he moved to Chicago, Boeh said, he heard about his recycling options from his landlord. He said he would like to see the city get involved and perhaps send fliers or letters to new residents to inform them of their options. The city maintains chicagorecycles.org as a repository for all things recycling. For Boeh, it's not enough. "You've got to step outside the box and catch people's attention with something they are not used to seeing."

Not being diligent about recycling isn't the only thing Toby Greenwalt, 32, of Portage Park, feels guilty about.

"I'd like to say I'd consider myself environmentally conscious, if not always in practice, definitely in awareness," he said. "At the same time I'm kind of lazy. It's kind of hard to always take my beliefs and put them into practice."

Not only does he let the recycling pile up in his garage only to throw it out, he said he feels bad about driving short distances as opposed to taking the CTA. Additionally, he said he has thought about building a compost pile for food waste, but he has delayed it because of the initial investment and time constraints. Still, he's improved his home to become more energy efficient, and installed a smart water meter to track his water use.

"I'd like to participate more, but I have a lot of stuff on my plate," said Greenwalt, who has a young child.

That's a sentiment shared by Villalobos.

"I wish I could do anything and everything I could possibly do to keep the environment at its cleanest," she said. "But it's pretty hard."

RECYCLE FAILS

Blue bin or garbage can? Even the recycling-savvy can make some common mistakes, and Chris Sauve of the Department of Streets and Sanitation knows it. His mantra? When in doubt, leave it out (of the recycling pile). Here's a list of common trash-sorting mistakes, and how to fix them. M.S.

Plastic grocery bags: Yes, they're plastic. No, they don't go in the bin. Bags should be recycled at the grocery store, where they can properly be sent off-site.

Glass shards: Shattered fragments from windows and certain types of decorative glass shouldn't be recycled. Because they are tempered differently than, say, a Snapple bottle, they belong in the trash.

Aseptic packaging: A fancy name for orange juice containers and juice boxes—the kind with a wax-like coating—these items are commonly thrown in the trash. They are, however, meant for the blue bin.

Styrofoam coffee cups: Those empty Dunkin' Donuts containers, like most Styrofoam, are commonly mistaken for being recyclable, but they actually belong in the trash.

"It looks plastic": Some items that look like other recyclable items actually aren't. Examples include toothpaste containers, certain types of plastic flower pots, inflatable pool toys, CDs and milk crates.

Check labels carefully, as well as the top of the city's blue bins (if you have one) to see what goes where. If you still aren't sure, chicagorecycles.org can help.

Mayor plans to file an injunction as teachers say they need more time

CHICAGO

08

Chicago Tribune

What was thought to be a done deal unraveled Sunday as Chicago Teachers Union President Karen Lewis was unable to sell union delegates on ending the teachers strike, likely leaving more than 350,000 Chicago Public Schools students locked out of the classroom at least two more days.

Mayor Emanuel late Sunday called the walkout "illegal" and pledged to seek an injunction in court to force an end to the city's first teachers strike in a quarter century.

Delegates had met with Lewis for nearly three hours to review the tentative contract that had been brokered after months of negotiation, but ultimately extended the strike.

"They're not happy with the agreement. They'd like it to be a lot better for us than it is," Lewis said. "This is the deal we got. This is not a good deal by any stretch of the imagination, not [compared] to what our members are [used] to having."

Delegates expressed frustration that they hadn't been given more time to consider the lengthy contract revisions and said they would meet with their members Tuesday, after the Jewish holidays.

Lewis acknowledged returning to classes Wednesday may be optimistic, considering how difficult it has been for the union and CPS to find agreement on many key issues.

Emanuel called upon CPS officials "to explore every action possible" to return students to school. He has maintained for more than a week that the two major sticking points in negotiations—evaluations and the ability to recall teachers who have been laid off—are not legal grounds for a work stoppage.

"I will not stand by while the children of Chicago are played as pawns in an internal dispute within a union," Emanuel said in a released statement.

It would appear the earliest that the district could get an injunction to get students back in school would be for Tuesday classes.

"That's one day they don't have right now," Emanuel spokeswoman Sarah Hamilton said. "Our signal is that we're serious about getting kids back in school."

Delegates could have ended the strike with a vote Sunday, but only the union's full membership of roughly 26,000 teachers and para-professionals can approve the contract.

"To go on strike is pretty serious stuff, and to call off a strike is pretty serious," said Jay Rehak, a union delegate and veteran English teacher at Whitney Young High School. "We need to go to our members to know how they feel about this. We didn't want to speculate."

Teen charged in bar bomb plot

Chicago Tribune

A Hillside teenager has been charged with trying to detonate a car bomb outside a bar in downtown Chicago, following months of surveillance in which he boasted to undercover federal agents of ignoring reprimands from a mosque leader against plans for terrorism, the U.S. attorney's office announced.

Adel Daoud, 18, parked a green Jeep Cherokee in front of the bar Friday night, then tried to detonate a device he believed to be a bomb as he walked away into an alley, court documents allege. But the bomb, which was inert and had been planted by FBI agents, didn't explode and Daoud was arrested on the spot, federal authorities said.

A preliminary hearing is scheduled for Monday at the U.S. Dirksen Courthouse.

Daoud was charged with attempting to use a weapon of mass destruction and attempting to damage and destroy a building by means of an explosive. A preliminary hearing is scheduled for Monday.

Authorities did not name the bar that Daoud allegedly targeted.

4 DUBLIN An Irish tabloid newspaper broke ranks with its British and Irish rivals to publish topless pictures of the wife of Prince William on Saturday, risking legal action from the royal family and prompting its British co-owner to cut ties with the title.

The royal couple already have begun action against the French magazine Closer for publishing a dozen shots of Catherine, Duchess of Cambridge—the former Kate Middleton—taken as she slipped off her bikini top while sunbathing at a secluded French country house.

The pictures have reignited a debate over privacy and freedom of the press, especially in Britain, where media could face new regulations after a series of publishing scandals.

All British papers have refrained from publishing the photographs, including the Sun, the only British title to run pictures of William's brother Harry cavorting naked in a Las Vegas hotel last month.

The Irish Daily Star paper published a two-page spread of 10 photographs of the duchess from Closer magazine under the headline "Angry Kate to sue mag over snaps."

A teaser headline on the front page of Ireland's best-selling tabloid promised "the magazine shots everyone wants to see."

A spokeswoman for Prince William condemned the publication, saying:

"There can be no motivation for this action other than greed."

Northern and Shell, the Irish paper's British co-owner, said it was dismayed.

Chairman Richard Desmond said he was taking "immediate steps to close down the joint venture" with Independent News and Media (INM), Ireland's biggest media company.

5 Tension high after attacks, protests

Even as anti-American violence eased Saturday around the Muslim world, tensions remained high—stoked, in some nations, by the prospect of U.S. troops arriving to protect U.S. diplomatic missions.

6 Air Force taps new commander

The Air Force said Saturday it selected a woman to serve as the new commander of basic training as the service wrestles with allegations that male instructors sexually assaulted and harassed female trainees.

7 4 killed in insider attack

Four U.S. troops fighting with the NATO-led alliance were killed in another suspected "insider" attack in southern Afghanistan on Sunday, bringing the total number of deaths this weekend caused by Afghans turning on their allies to six.

8 DEA shuts down drug distributor

The U.S. Drug Enforcement Administration on Friday banned a Walgreens distribution center in Jupiter, Fla., from dispensing controlled substances to its pharmacies in Florida and the East Coast, saying the oxycodone distributor constituted an "imminent danger" to the public.

10 tips for finding players when they're not on the field

The NFL season's started and that means Bears sightings. Lots of them. The Bears players who live elsewhere during the offseason have joined the teammates who live in the Chicago area year-round. Together, the hard-to-miss athletes and their coaches will be eating, hanging out and shopping around the city the next few months. Here are 10 things I've learned about Bears sightings.

Cutler likes Mastro's after games

Jay Cutler often will dine at Mastro's Steakhouse with fiancée Kristin Cavallari following home games, including after both playoff games in 2011. I'm told the quarterback prefers to sit in a booth in the back when he's with Cavallari or family but will sit at the bar when he visits Mastro's with teammates. Of course, it remains to be seen how fatherhood affects Cutler's routine.

Lovie opts for Joe's before games

Maybe he's superstitious or maybe he just has a routine he likes to follow, but Bears coach Lovie Smith frequently dines at Joe's Stone Crab the night before home games.

Urlacher enjoys a good country show

There are plenty of Chicago athletes who like country music, but few bigger than Brian Urlacher. The eight-time Pro Bowler has been spotted at several country shows, including Carrie Underwood and, more recently, Jake Owen at Joe's Bar, and has befriended members of Rascal Flatts. "Brian loves country music," Rascal Flatts singer Gary LeVox told me in July. "He's too big to tell him he sings it off-pitch."

Hester doesn't hit the scene often

Devin Hester told me in November that he's become a homebody, partly because he doesn't always feel comfortable going out in public and his wife likes when he stays home. Also, he's an avid gamer and plays just about every day—but not as much as teammate Kellen Davis. "He stays up all night playing, even if we've got practice the next day," Hester said of Davis.

Cutler and Marshall click on and off the field

Since Brandon Marshall was traded to the Bears in March, Cutler has taken his former Denver teammate to several of his favorite Chicago spots, including Mastro's, Curv's, Public House, Studio Paris and Joe's Stone Crab. They recently went on a double date with their significant others to Chicago Cut Steakhouse.

Idonije is available

Want a Bears player to come to your charity event? Call Israel Idonije. He seems to hit more social functions than any other Bears player, from fundraisers hosted by teammates Lance Briggs and Charles Tillman to benefits hosted by retired Cub Kerry Wood and the Miami Heat's Dwyane Wade. The good news is that former Bears Pro Bowler-turned-Chicago socialite Jerry Azumah will have someone to pass the torch to.

Peppers goes to Bulls games

Julius Peppers has been spotted courtside at Bulls games ever since he signed with the Bears in 2010. Makes sense: In addition to playing football in college, the defensive end was a walk-on for North Carolina's basketball team. Devin Hester and Brian Urlacher also like to take in Bulls games.

Monday night is like Saturday night for players

You typically won't find the Bears practicing at Halas Hall on Tuesdays. They tend to get the day off; that's why some stay out late Mondays.

Do not photograph Cutler without permission

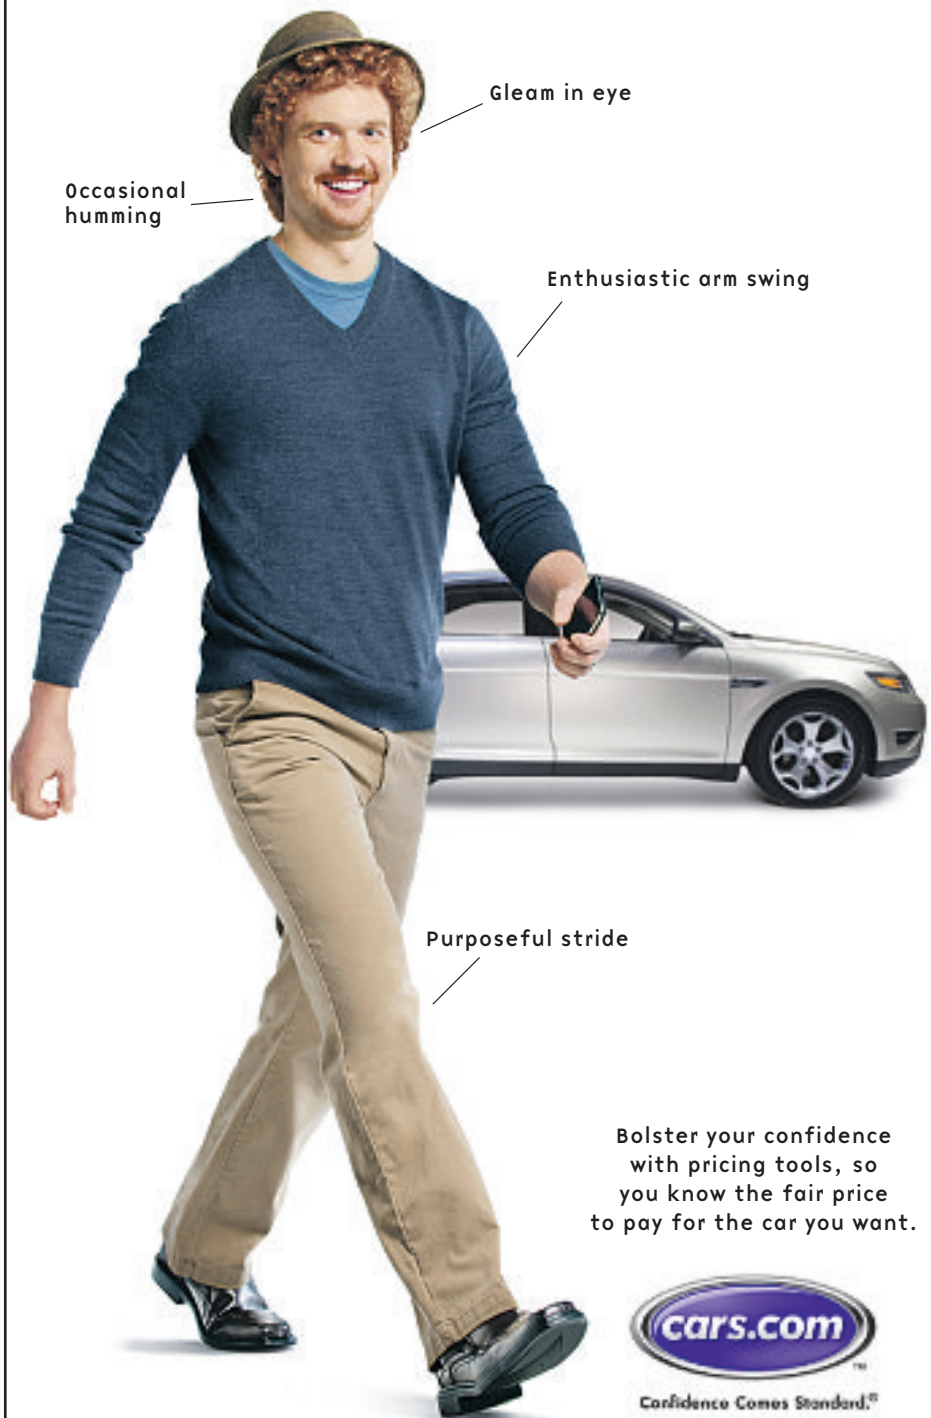

When a nosy restaurant patron tweeted a photo he took of Cutler and Cavallari at Joe's Stone Crab in November and wrote "@KristinCav doesn't look pleased! @JayCutler6 may have been using the menu as an offensive line?" Cutler tweeted back "Could be how rude and disrespectful you were. Just a guess though."

Consistent Bears? That would be a plus

Jack M Silverstein

» redeye@

Two days before the Bears pooped themselves on national TV, a reporter at Halas Hall told Jay Cutler that if he targeted Brandon Marshall as many times per game as he did in Week 1, he would throw to Marshall 240 times. Could he do such a thing?

Cutler wasn't sure. But he knew he completed nine of those passes, and that seemed feasible. "What's nine times 16?" Cutler asked the media. Silence. And more silence. Not one person could answer the question. I myself multiplied 16 by 10 in my head and then subtracted nine, and then I decided that was inaccurate and I had done something wrong.

"Not a bunch of math majors," Cutler said, and everyone laughed, but I was troubled, because how was it possible that this pack of educated adults could not complete a simple equation?

I felt pretty much the same way watching the Bears offense Thursday. How could this team that pummeled the Colts for 428 yards and 41 points prove so inept against the Packers?

It started with the offensive line, the men charged with blocking Clay Matthews, the unblockable man. Matthews roughed up J'Marcus Webb and the Bears O-line to the tune of 3.5 sacks, and his teammates bagged an additional 3.5 sacks, meaning Cutler has been sacked 119 times in 43 games as a Bear.

Speaking of things that should never happen, former Bears running back Cedric Benson outgained current Bears running back Matt Forte 116-80 in total yards, while Marshall produced less on two catches than Packers backup tight end Tom Crabtree produced on one, a 27-yard touchdown on a brilliant fake field goal that made my jaw drop and my heart sag.

This game also gave us key drops from Marshall, Lance Briggs and Devin Hester, Cutler's second-lowest passer rating EVER, eight penalties and zero trips to the red zone.

Add it all up and you get a 1-1 Bears team that's down a tiebreaker to the Packers. I'm no math major, but that's not good.

SPECIAL CONTRIBUTOR JACK M. SILVERSTEIN COVERS THE BEARS FOR REDEYE. SAY HEY @READJACK.

NOT-SO-HOT DATE

SEPT. 22

The Blackhawks on Sunday postponed their annual training camp festival, which was scheduled to take place Sept. 22 at the United Center. The announcement comes after owners locked out NHL players late Saturday. Last time this happened, the 2004-05 season was wiped out. But it can't happen again, right? Right?

BAD CALL, REF

The NFL on Sunday replaced a referee assigned to the New Orleans-Carolina game after his Facebook page appeared to show him as an ardent Saints fan. Brian Stropolo, who was set to work as the slide judge Sunday, was pulled from the crew. Roger Goodell is not exactly renowned for his leniency. Mr. Stropolo, so good luck with that.

The new fall shows from broadcast TV earn a solid 'meh'

The broadcast networks have started rolling out their new series for the fall and of the 21 new shows they will debut in the coming months, only a handful merit much more than a shrug.

Not to be a Debbie Downer, but I had a hard time picking a Top 5. That assessment might be a bit unfair. I've seen just the pilot episodes of most of the new shows and it's difficult to judge an entire season by one episode. Last spring I gave NBC's "Smash" a rave review after seeing the well-done pilot; it quickly floundered and I could barely watch it just a few weeks later.

I have reservations about all the shows in my Top 5 this fall, so consider that when reading this preview. The cable networks still are churning out the highest quality shows. And that's the case again this fall, although PBS is offering some intriguing options and at least a couple of the freshmen broadcast network series rise above mediocre. Several returning network shows are likely to dazzle with their new seasons.

Here are five promising new network shows, five other shows that should be worth programming into your DVR and a list of premiere dates for series many viewers will be happy to have back.

NEW BROADCAST

Arrow 7 p.m. Oct. 10, CW

Yes, this is a superhero story based on DC Comics' "Green Arrow" saga, but the turbocharged pilot is surprisingly grounded in reality while setting up a ton of intriguing plots and possibilities. Stephen Amell (left) plays Oliver Queen, a billionaire hunk with a capital "H" who through tragedy becomes the hooded, moody vigilante with no super powers, just awesome archery skills.

Ben and Kate 7:30 p.m. Sept. 25, Fox

I was surprised I laughed as much as I did watching this comedy about Ben (Nat Faxon, far right), an aimless goof who pops in on his uptight single mom sister, Kate (Dakota Johnson, near right), and decides he'll help raise her 5-year-old daughter (Maggie Jones)—and maybe grow up himself. Faxon and Johnson have a good rapport, but sometimes Faxon gets a little too manic for my tastes. (This sitcom was neck-and-neck-and-neck with "The New Normal" and "Go On" for the fifth spot on this list, but the second episodes of those shows knocked them off. "Ben and Kate" could do the same.)

Nashville 9 p.m. Oct. 10, ABC

Connie Britton plays Rayna James, a fading country music queen whose reign is challenged by diva-ish young crossover star Juliette Barnes (Hayden Panettiere). The well-written pilot plays like a twangy everybody-done-everyone-else-wrong song. Nashville politics, family squabbles and romantic entanglements mean plenty of soapy intrigue.

Last Resort 7 p.m. Sept. 27, ABC

Andre Braugher (below) and Scott Speedman play the commanders of a nuclear submarine crew that goes rogue in the most suspenseful and exciting pilot of the fall season. Rockford native Shawn Ryan ("The Shield," "The Chicago Code") created the drama, which is as see-worthy as anything on the fall schedule.

The Mindy Project 8:30 p.m. Sept. 25, Fox

Mindy Kaling of "The Office" created and stars in comedy about an OB-GYN (Kaling) who likes to flicks but can't seem to make the romantic mag her own life. The fictional Mindy seemed a little the pilot, but I was charmed enough to recomm

The Walking Dead

8 p.m. Oct. 14, AMC

Zombies are the least of Rick Grimes' gritty group's worries in the third season of the horror hit. The Governor (David Morrissey) rules the town of Woodbury and with the help of Merle Dixon (Michael Rooker), he wants to rebuild civilization just so. That's not going to sit well with the Ricktatorship, which is backed by the crossbow skills of Merle's brother, Daryl (Norman Reedus), and the razor-sharp swords of Michonne (Danai Gurira).

PREMIERES WORTH CATCHING

8:30 p.m. Sept. 20, NBC

"Nikita," 8 p.m.
Oct. 19, CW

"Happy Endings,"
8 p.m. Oct. 23, ABC

OTHER SHOWS

Homeland 9 p.m. Sept. 30, Showtime

Season 2 of the cat-and-mouse thriller picks up several months after bipolar former CIA analyst Carrie Mathison (Claire Danes, right) has spent time in a psych ward after her breakdown. The mouse, former U.S. Marine Sgt. turned terrorist spy Nicholas Brody (Damian Lewis), now is a congressman. It's going to be difficult to top the flawless first season, but I've seen the premiere and so far, so good.

Call the Midwife 7 p.m. Sept. 30, PBS

With "Downton Abbey" not returning until 2013, PBS is kindly providing viewers with two series to tide them over, "Call the Midwife" and "Upstairs, Downstairs." Based on the memoirs of Jennifer Worth, this six-part drama focuses on the joys and hardships Jenny Lee, a young midwife in London's East End during the 1950s. I'm not sure Downton's Dowager Countess would approve, but it's a fascinating twist on the British period drama.

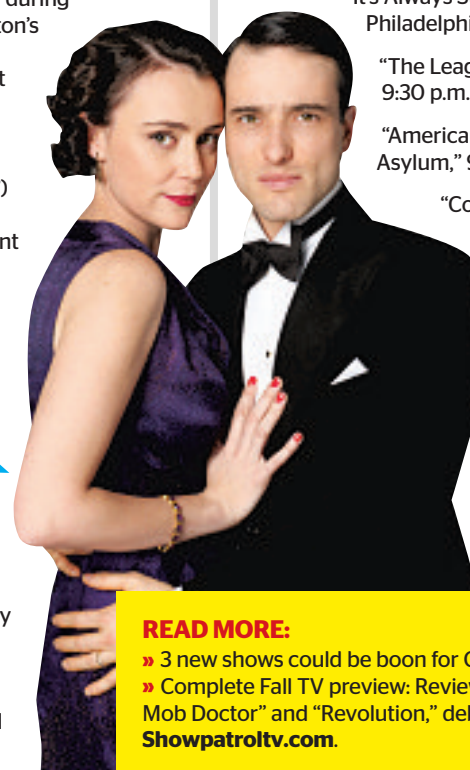

Hunted 9 p.m. Oct. 19, Cinemax

Frank Spotnitz ("The X-Files," "Strike Back") created this spy thriller focusing on Sam Hunter (Melissa George, left), the best agent at private espionage firm Byzantium who returns to work after surviving an attempt on her life, possibly by one of her co-workers. It's about time a kick-ass lady agent joins the likes of "Nikita" on TV. George, a veteran of the spy-gal thriller "Alias," knows exactly how high to kick.

Upstairs, Downstairs 8 p.m. Oct. 7, PBS

The new season of the revived classic rejoins the residents of 165 Eaton Place—both upstairs and downstairs—as world war looms over Britain. The travails of Lady Agnes Holland (Keeley Hawes, near right) and her diplomat husband, Sir Hallum (Ed Stoppard, far right), don't quite measure up to the drama at "Downton Abbey," but I was transfixed nonetheless.

Chicago streets light up prime-time shows

Chicago Tribune

The city of Chicago is prominently featured in no fewer than three new TV series this fall, and not a single one has to fake locations on a Hollywood soundstage. Fox's "The Mob Doctor," NBC's "Chicago Fire" and MTV's "Underemployed" all are filmed in Chicago using local crews and at least some local actors.

Combined with the Starz series "Boss," which is nearing the halfway point of its second season, that makes a total of four shows to come out of the city in a calendar year. Showtime's "Shameless" makes only occasional trips to Chicago to film its exterior scenes, but it is based in L.A.

"This is a new high for us," said Rich Moskal, who runs the Chicago Film Office. "We've never had this many one-hour drama series shoot here in one year." He said the last time the city was host to multiple series was in 1999, with "Early Edition," "Turks" and "Cupid."

While major film projects that come to Chicago (including 2008's "The Dark Knight" and 2011's "Transformers: Dark of the Moon") may seem like bigger fish, the "constant volume of episodic television has longer-lasting [economic] benefits," Moskal said. "Series production utilizes local resources by an even higher percentage than blockbuster features, increasing the expertise of our crew base, the capacity of our vendors and creating enormous opportunity for Chicago actors."

That means "as a production center, both in size and reputation, we grow exponentially."

The arrival last year of Cinespace, the new production facility in North Lawndale, has helped make much of this possible, adding to the soundstage space long established at Chicago Studio City. With two major soundstages in town, the city can now handle multiple TV series at once.

None of it matters, however, if the shows get low ratings and are yanked off the air. Last fall, "The Playboy Club," NBC's retro ode to Hugh Hefner, lasted just three episodes. If all goes according to plan, both "The Mob Doctor" and "Chicago Fire" will be in town filming through the end of the year—if not longer.

Could a "rivalry" softball game or bar trivia tournament be in order?

"We accept," said "Chicago Fire" executive producer Dick Wolf. "Mob Boss" co-star (and Evanston native) Zach Gilford is ready to make it happen. "We'd whup them!" he said. "They're just a bunch of pretty-boy firefighters!"

Let the TV games begin. "The Mob Doctor" debuts at 8 p.m. Monday on Fox.

"Chicago Fire" debuts at 9 p.m. Oct. 10 on NBC.

"Underemployed" debuts at 9 p.m. Oct. 16 on MTV.

Joe to go

Chicago Tribune

Ever since canned and bottled coffees flooded the U.S. 15 years or so ago, there's been a steady increase in consumption as well as innovation. These days, ready-to-drink coffee is an almost billion-dollar bonanza—sales were $944 million for the previous 12 months as of July, according to market research firm SymphonyIRI Group—with canned and bottled coffees targeting most every taste and lifestyle.

We tasted 10 canned and bottled coffees from the dozens available, some newcomers as well as the granddaddy of canned coffee, UCC Coffee with Milk from Japan. Half had milk (or a milk product); the remainder included chocolate. Some were amped up with vitamins, some with green tea. We found them at supermarkets, convenience stores and an Asian market. They ranged in price from 13 cents per ounce to almost 33 cents per ounce. Some can be purchased on their own websites, others at amazon.com. Here's what our eight tasters found. Note that because the coffees are so different, we did not rank them; instead, we give a rating for each. Calories are per container.

The sun enters your sign this week, marking your personal New Year. Don't let anybody negative drag you down. You have a lot of social and career opportunities. Keep shooting for the stars.

Scorpio Oct. 24-Nov. 21
You might have an intense attraction to a stranger as the moon kicks up the chemistry. If you're already in a relationship, you'll find this stressful. If you're single, you could descend into total sexual obsession.

Sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21
Mercury is telling you to be more open to entertaining fresh points of view. Maybe you'll learn that someone who is your complete opposite when it comes to religious or political ideas actually has some intelligent things to say.

Capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19
Sometimes you have to embrace change, no matter how stressful it seems. The sun is telling you to accept that a relationship is going to be different or a work situation is undergoing a dramatic shift. It will be OK.

Aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18
You'll receive a lot of appreciation this week thanks to a bouncy sun. If you have to give a presentation or attend an interview, you'll express yourself well. If you're going out on a first date, you'll impress with your charm and style.

Pisces Feb. 19-March 20
Take action and go after what you want. Mars is telling you that it's time to make a move. If you've been dying to ask somebody out, just do it. If you're thinking about applying for a new job, go for it.

Aries March 21-April 19
Your romantic life might feel like a total soap opera right now, thanks to a melodramatic moon. You're not sure if you love your partner or hate him. You can't figure out if you want to marry your girlfriend or send her packing. Give it more time.

Taurus April 20-May 20
A friendship that has been part of your life for years is under a lot of stress. Mars is showing you that it's important to have your needs met. You're growing less tolerant of mistreatment. Keep standing up for yourself.

Gemini May 21-June 21
Friendly Mercury is keeping you on the move. You're networking with clients, marketing yourself and socializing with interesting people. Keep doing this. Pretty soon you'll find yourself in a more solid situation at work.

Cancer June 22-July 22
You could be freaking out about your body this week as Mars makes you super conscious about physical flaws. But whether you're losing all your hair or suffering from too much body hair, you're still attractive in your own way.

Leo July 23-Aug. 22
You'll be tempted to get in the middle of something that really doesn't concern you. Maybe you want to fix your best friend's relationship by talking to his girlfriend. Don't do it. You'll only make a huge, stinking mess.

That's no hairdresser!
Lady Gaga makes the rounds of Chicago fashion

ABOUT LAST NIGHT

Luis Gomez

Lady Gaga was sporting half-shaven, dyed-brown hair and a black Megadeth T-shirt that exposed her tattooed arms Wednesday when she visited Wicker Park. So in other words, the pop star fit right in.

Gaga—whose rumored boyfriend, Taylor Kinney, is filming NBC's "Chicago Fire" in Chicago—bought makeup, skin care and bath products from Mojo Spa as well as purses and a sequined top from Recycle Men's & Women's Designer Resale.

"She asked if I had any vintage Louis Vuitton, Chanel or Christian Dior," Recycle co-owner Ron DeRobertis said. "I didn't know who she was, but she had this huge bouncer and a personal secretary. I asked her if she wanted to see the prices and she said 'Not really.' She didn't even try the stuff on. I asked her what she does and she told me she was a hairdresser."

Store B Vintage had just closed for the night when Gaga stopped by, but the store made an exception for the world famous singer and let her in. I'm told Gaga bought so many designer garments, hats and purses, the store needs to replenish inventory.

"Happy you found some treasures at our store!" Store B Vintage tweeted to Gaga on Thursday: "Rock the [bleep] out of the DIOR turbans."

In addition to shopping, Gaga visited Salud Tequila Lounge for drinks. According to Salud's Facebook page Wednesday, "Lady Gaga stopped by Salud for some #tequila earlier."

FEB. 13

Gaga will be back! That's when she's scheduled to perform at the United Center.

Emmys pre-game

"Game of Thrones" led the winners at the Creative Arts Emmys on Saturday in a ceremony that also honored Kathy Bates for channeling Charlie Sheen on "Two and a Half Men" but shut out Emmy darling "Mad Men." "Thrones" won six awards, including costumes, makeup and special visual effects. The prime-time event airs live Sunday.

Following weeks of speculation, Fox has made it official: Nicki Minaj and Keith Urban will join Mariah Carey and Randy Jackson as "American Idol" judges. The move comes as "Idol" was getting ready to start auditions in New York on Sunday for Season 12, which will premiere in January. The field is crowded: Earlier this week, singing-show rivals "The X Factor" and "The Voice" opened to relatively soft ratings, with the former losing nearly one-third of its audience compared with last year. GETTY IMAGES

"sometimes i feel like i love everyone more than they love me. hatttte that feeling."

—Miley Cyrus in a tweet Thursday. She later added that she was spending "quality fiance time" with Liam Hemsworth, so not to worry.

More than friends

Touchdown! Eva Longoria confirmed that she and Jets quarterback Mark Sanchez, with whom she has been seen over the past few months, are dating. She spilled the truth to her friend, "Extra" host Mario Lopez. The New York tabloids are gonna have fun with this.

'Things happen'

What's 18 years when it comes to love? "We just kind of hit it off." 43-year-old Jennifer Lopez said of 25-year-old boyfriend Casper Smart on Friday's "Katie." "It wasn't something I was looking for, trust me. But things happen and they happen naturally." Of course we trust you, JLo!
